Stenberg looks at the key intergovernmental events and trends of the past 20 years, a period which he says has "altered the fiscal, functional, and political balance within the federal system" as well as re-kindled the debate over the proper division of powers and responsibilities among the constituent governmental units.

14 ACIR and the Intergovernmental System: A 20-Year Review

Like the intergovernmental system, the ACIR has changed in many ways over its first 20 years. In this article, ACIR Information Officer Carol S. Weissert outlines those changes and makes some assessment as to how effective the Commission has proven to be over the years.

6 Forecasting the Future of Federalism

Although predictions are risky at best, attempts to examine the various forces that will affect the future and to analyze possible scenarios can be quite useful. ACIR Senior Analyst David R. Beam lays the background for ACIR's consideration of the future of federalism by reviewing the dramatic changes of the past 20 years and examining the analytical problems inherent in forecasting developments likely to occur over the next decade. This piece is excerpted from a longer paper prepared for ACIR's Conference on the Future of Federalism.

10 Fiscal Federalism in the 1980s

George F. Break, professor of economics at the University of California at Berkeley, discusses what may occur in the 1980s under three possible scenarios: high inflation, a slow-growth, and a world of high-cost energy. This piece is excerpted from a longer paper prepared for ACIR's Conference on the Future of Federalism.

15 The 1980s: Monopoly or Competition?

Aaron Wildavsky, professor of political science at the University of California at Berkeley, describes a struggle which might take place in the 1980s between the forces of bureaucratic monopoly and the forces of competition arising from a greatly enlarged number of service providers. This piece is excerpted from a longer paper prepared for ACIR's Conference on the Future of Federalism.

Intergovernmental PERSPECTIVE

2 View from the Commission

Tennessee Governor Lamar Alexander, Vice Chair of the Commission, highlights some of the key intergovernmental happenings during 1981 and introduces the Commission staff's annual assessment of federalism.

4 1981: A Threshold Year for Federalism

While clearly 1982 will be an important year for intergovernmental relationships, these events should not completely overshadow the developments of 1981. ACIR has called it a threshold year for federalism, for it may well be considered the beginning rather than the end of dramatic change.

5 The First Ten Months: Grant-in-Aid, Regulatory and Other Changes

Significant changes in the federal grant system, along with initiatives in the regulatory area, relevant court decisions, and other intergovernmental events emanating from Washington are discussed in this article by ACIR Assistant Director David Walker and staffers Al Richter and Cynthia Colella.

23 The New Formula for Fiscal Federalism: Austerity Equals Decentralization

Fiscal federalism, always a significant intergovernmental concern, became a top domestic agenda item in 1981, as the federal government joined states and localities in slowing down the growth of spending. This and other events and trends developing in the year are described here by ACIR Assistant Director John Shannon and Susannah Calkins.

30 "Rebalanced Federalism" The States' Role and Response

In 1981 the spotlight turned to the states as they prepared to assume additional responsibilities at the same time they were dealing with cuts in federal aid and many were facing immediate or future budgetary difficulties. State legislative-executive and state-local relationships in particular seemed to be in a period of flux in 1981. Assistant Director Carl Stenberg and Jean Lawson analyze these and other trends in this article.

Kenneth Howard seek to provide a framework for appraising these issues while pointing up differences in three major proposals for resolving them.

22 Rich States—Poor States: Inequalities in Our Federal System

The difference between the rather extraordinary tax wealth of some states and the relatively anemic resources of others is an important and growing concern. Former ACIR Analyst Robert B. Lucke analyses measuring fiscal disparities and allocating federal aid to compensate for them.

PERSPECTIVE

2 View from the Commission

Charleston (SC) Mayor Joseph P. Riley, Jr. says that New Federalism does not replace the importance of good federal-city relationships.

4 1984—Not a Good Fiscal Year for Big Brother

John Shannon points to profound changes in fiscal federalism during the past 20 years. It's "a world turned upside down" in which the fiscal condition of the national and state governments cannot be taken for granted.

8 Whatever Happened to Federalism?

Basic issues of federalism were upstaged last year by the campaign and budget, but Washington found time to preempt states, revamp industrial revenue bonds, and provide antitrust relief to localities.

15 States, Localities, and the Court

Recent Supreme Court decisions had intergovernmental impacts but no clear pattern emerged—until the San Antonio ruling in early 1985.

19 State and Local Governments Adopt Strategic Policies

An array of new approaches in economic development and education illustrates how government is adopting a stronger entrepreneurial attitude.

32 Federalism and American Politics: New Relationships, a Changing System

Political commitment to party and place has eroded substantially since 1960. Senior Analyst Timothy Conlan examines the reasons for, and consequences of, the vast changes in American political life.

46 The Chairman's View

Robert Hawkins, Jr. discusses the role of ACIR's research in presenting well-reasoned alternatives to policymakers and citizens.
